

Green your housing stock: Let Foot Anstey guide your sustainability journey.

Is decarbonising your affordable housing stock leaving you with lots of unanswered questions? You're not alone.

Sustainability is critical to all those in the development sector but particularly those operating to provide affordable housing.

From Foot Anstey's experience in this area, we understand the pressures and opportunities that decarbonising homes represents and have a passion for contributing to the green economy and ensuring that we help our housing association clients achieve meaningful social value from their decarbonisation agenda.

We have recently been supporting housing association clients on projects such as:

- The retrofitting of existing homes to increase their energy efficiency (and reduce bills for occupiers) – including models to recoup capital costs of such works without disadvantaging the occupiers.
- Managing supply chains to ensure supply chain partners are playing their part in reducing their carbon footprints.
- Supporting with the procurement, supply and installation of heat pumps, insulation and renewable energy sources across property stock.
- Helping support new EV strategies including the transition of fleets over to EVs and implementing the charging infrastructure needed to do that.
- Reducing embodied carbon in new build construction (including introducing appropriate provisions into contracts to allow the measurement and monitoring of initiatives).
- The installation of solar panels on site cabins for new builds to sit behind the meter and serve the needs of the construction site during that phase.
- Supporting with connections to district heat networks.
